AGAMEMNON V DEAL OR NO DEAL

Another interesting hand with lots of educational points.
Deal or No Deal did well to bid to a slam and their auction broadly looks correct to me, the 4711 hand is well worth a 2♣ opening (as you expect to hold ten solid tricks facing 8xx, xx, xxxx, xxxx or the like) and East trusted his partner enough to show the A♠ even when holding a void heart.
I am a bit surprised that upon finding the A♠ with East, West didn't investigate a grand, facing Axxx, x, KQxx, xxxx then 7 would be laydown and biddable, so EW must consider themselves a little fortunate.

On to the lead! I have a little sympathy with North, but you need to remember when you hold an unexpected trump trick (and this hand falls into that category) it is rarely right to make an attacking lead.
Whilst putting an opponent to an early guess (for example leading from a king through an AQ in the dummy) is sometimes right, this sort of position comes up time and again.
The safe sequence in reality is not so safe, change the spades to QJ9 and now it doesn't cost a trick.

When you hold two possible side suit tricks and a trump trick and the opponents bid a slam I would tend to lead passive and expect them to go down. Here the ♥10 lead is probably right (you know where all the honours are) although if partner has stiff jack and declarer AKQ87xx you might not be laughing at the end.
Remember partner hasn't doubled 5♦ for a diamond lead or 3♠ for a spade lead, so there is a case for a club lead (but partner could just have nothing).

Michael Byrne